The Leadership Library® on the Internet Does “Best Job” in Recent Technology Blog Review

Online information expert praises the online database from Leadership Directories, Inc.

New York, NY (Leadership Directories, Inc.) October 17, 2006 – The Leadership Library® on the Internet is prominently featured as an “impressive” company directory database in an October 5, 2006 posting on the Intelligent Agent website, www.ia-blog.com.

“I was pleasantly surprised when I tested a database I had not come across before, and found that it did the best job of providing the most names and titles,” wrote blog editor Robert Berkman. “And the names provided were not just at the executive level, but down to senior managers too, like HR contacts, libraries and information centers, training and development departments, purchasing, corporate contributions, and government affairs personnel. The database is called The Leadership Library® on the Internet.” Berkman concluded in his posting that: “...if you regularly need deep and timely information on people in companies – or in other types of organizations too for that matter – this one looks like a winner to me.”

Intelligent Agent features analysis and commentary on the information industry, with a focus on digital research and web-related businesses. Robert Berkman is a recognized leader in the field of online information management and has authored several books, including Find It Fast: How to Uncover Expert Information on Any Subject Online or in Print and Rethinking the Corporate Information Center: A Blueprint for the 21st Century. Berkman posted his evaluation after profiling several databases for The Information Advisor, a monthly journal for knowledge professionals published by Information Today, Inc. Berkman is editor of The Information Advisor, and his profile extensively featured The Leadership Library®.
