The Leadership Library® on the Internet Evaluated as an “Excellent Database” in Recent Article

Information management newsletter praises the online database from Leadership Directories, Inc.

New York, NY (Leadership Directories, Inc.) December 11, 2006 – The Leadership Library® on the Internet was given high marks in the November 2006 issue of The Information Advisor. The in-depth profile commented on the database’s depth of information, precision searching, content accuracy, and easy-to-use interface.

“We tried out The Leadership Library® on the Internet and were quite taken with it,” wrote Editor Robert Berkman. “We could also filter and refine our search by organization name, geographic location, individual name, job function, title, education, industry/organization type, keyword in full text, and more.”

“It wasn’t the browsing and searching options that we were most impressed with, though they worked quite nicely,” Berkman continued, “Nor was it the interface or navigation, which is also very good. What we really appreciated was the deeper level of contacts that we could unearth...we found names, titles, and contact information for executives and senior managers in various levels of the organization, such as human resources, libraries and information centers, training and development departments, conference organizers, purchasing, corporate contributions, and government affairs.”

The profile cited the fact that The Leadership Library® on the Internet is updated on a daily basis, and that every listing is verified at its source. It also noted the variety of useful extra features, such as the ability to add notes, create bookmarks, save searches, create a customized “my leadership library,” and build customized lists for exporting.

“All in all,” Berkman concluded, “this is an excellent database because there is so much attention to detail on gathering timely executive names.”

The Information Advisor is a monthly newsletter for knowledge professionals, published by Information Today, Inc. Editor Robert Berkman is also the creator of Intelligent Agent (www.ia-blog.com), a technology blog featuring analysis and commentary on the information industry. Intelligent Agent featured similar comments about The Leadership Library® on the Internet in an October 5, 2006 posting.
